

The consolidation of radio stations, I have always felt, was not in the public interest. This is especially true for me now that Sinclair is planning to FORCE their stations to broadcast an anti-Kerry/pro-Bush film just before the election.

It frightens me that any company can have that much power and access to the airwaves to try to influence people to their way of thinking. If they were to balance the airtime with one pro-Kerry and one pro-Bush, then I might feel they were doing the public a service in pointing out the best of each candidate. The structure now is purely political in favor of one candidate and timed to air just before the election. To me, that's a scary thought that a company has that much power to try to influence the outcome of any of our elections. If ever there was a need for fair and balanced, this is it.
